Excerpts:

Fear: "It is not death that a man should fear, but he should fear never beginning to live" - Marcus Aurelius

Question to Ponder:

How can we see that many of our fears are baseless?

Men and Women: "Marriage is more than finding the right person. It is being the right person" - Anonymous

Question to Ponder:

Do we prefer to find the right person rather than to be the right person? Why is it easy to idealize someone initially?

As a therapist, I find that clients remark that quotes are helpful for shifting out of feelings of hopelessness or feeling stuck. As a yoga teacher, students find that quotes uplift them and help to maintain levels of peace and wonder. We get trapped in our habits of circular thoughts at times and quotes from the wise can release us.

Some Eastern thinkers speak about attachment. What does that mean?

Do we like to indulge and sink into different unconscious states? If so, why?

What do great minds across history say about our habits and the power of persistence?

How can we break through our stories and assumptions more so that we have humor, joy and wonder each day?
